PRC to hold workshop for statewide investor-owned utilities to present on reliability metrics and practices

SANTA FE — The New Mexico Public Regulation Commission (PRC) will hold an informational meeting to explore the reliability of service from each of the state's three investor-owned utility companies. The PRC hopes to learn how reliability impacts the utilities investment in facilities and operational upgrades. This meeting is the beginning of a process to create rules for reporting standardized reliability metrics for investor-owned electric utility distribution operations.

An agenda for this meeting can be found here.
